The exhibition Resonating Ceramics will feature works by students of four higher schools of art participating in the research and creation project ECART – European Ceramic Art & Research Team. Twenty participants make up for 9 two-person teams and 2 solo artists, who explored the relation between ceramic objects and sound, and related their research to the notion of rituals. Their investigation highlights material and formal experimentation, and summons up fields such as acoustics, organology and anthropology. Utilitarian objects, symbolic objects or performative objects, the works presented here partake in all these categories, blurring the senses and the perception of visual and sound elements.

The exhibition follows up on the exhibition organized at the HEAD – Geneva from September 14 to October 15 2022 and is supported by the European Commission through the strategic European partnership Erasmus+ program, which is accompanying the project from start to finish.
